1 Introduction

The YOSEIKAN BUDO springs from the idea of a synthesis of martial arts to realize an educational vision. This task has been entrusted to Hiroo Mochizuki since his earliest youth by his father Minoru - Minoru himself was influenced by Master Jigoro Kano.

At the end of the 1960's Hiroo Mochizuki discovered the principle of wave motion and its increase of the physical power, optimized and multiplied at the point of impact. This was the starting point of the Development of YOSEIKAN BUDO (*). Hiroo Mochizuki is the inventor and founder of the Yoseikan Budo.

The wave motion is generated by two opposite, non-synchronous Forces. The change in frequency (timing) produces different amplitudes:

- short wave movement (for example for Atemi)
- medium wave motion (for example for weapons techniques with sword or Tonfa)
- long wave motion (for example for throws, naginata or lance)

The discovery of a common denominator to all disciplines – just like a tree produces all the branches - forms the basis of this modern method that is constantly evolving.

Designed as a place of constant search, the Yoseikan Budo is imperatively based on the compliance with anatomical and biomechanical principles as well as the balance of exercises involving both halves of the brain.

The infinitely wide field of application, such as practicing with bare hands or with weapons, in different distances, while standing or on the ground, helps the disciple to increase their ingenuity and ability to adapt. This extends their way of thinking.

With the help of the wealth of techniques the attitude of sharing, of mutual help and respect towards each other will be enhanced.

(* Literally "Budo of the Yoseikan School": resumption of the name of the three consecutive dojos in honor of his father
